Writing

... someone touched my shoulder. I flinched and looked at them in a frightened manner. It turned out that it was an elderly man, approximately 5 feet 8 inches with a queer look in his eyes. He was holding a woven basket, the content of which I couldn't make out, as it was pitch dark outside. 'They craved the taste of death which is why they have brought you here,' whispered the man in a hoarse voice. 'We must get out of here until it's too late,' warned me the man.

Several days and nights passed, we were still looking for paths but we just seemed to have been out of luck all those days. As luck would have it, we discovered a small log cabin in the woods.

Suddenly, the man growled and turned into a werewolf. No sooner had he looked at me than I ran like the wind. The road seemed to have been endless. Accidentally, I slipped on a paving stone and fell down the precipice.

luckily, I woke up and realised I'd been dreaming. I got out of bed on my left side because the right ankle was terribly swollen.
